CAMELLIAS . . . for 1955

This list briefly describes only a small portion of the standard and rare varieties which we have growing in our nursery.

Prices quoted are for well rooted plants in 1 gallon containers at the nursery. On all orders to be packed and shipped, we charge an additional 50 cents for each 1 gallon container, and $1.00 for each 3 to 5 gallon container—minimum packing charge is $1.00.

We invite you to visit our nursery at any time. We have a large number of varieties in 3 and 5 gallon containers, named and priced for your convenient inspection and comparison.

Specimen plants available in many varieties at moderate prices.

CAMELLIA CULTURE

LOCATION: Camellias grow best where they are partially shaded during the hottest part of the day. North or east side of walls, buildings or under trees that are not too dense.

PLANTING: The soil for your Camellias should have (1) Good drainage; (2) A high humus content; (3) A slight acid reaction (PH 5 to 6.5).

For small or medium sized plants, dig a hole 24 inches across and 18 inches deep. Mix soil and Peat Moss in equal parts. Place part of this mixture in hole and tamp well. Fill, until when plant is set in place, soil level on plant will be slightly higher than surrounding soil, then finish filling, firm and water well.

WATERING: Keep your plants moist but not soggy wet. Water well, but only as often as necessary to keep soil moderately moist. It is beneficial to syringe the foliage frequently during the summer, but avoid wetting foliage when sun is bright or plants are in bloom.

FERTILIZING: An acid fertilizer should be used, but only on established plants. Apply in early spring (March), but never use more than the directions supplied with the fertilizer indicate. One or two more feedings may be applied at 60-day intervals, with only one-half as much fertilizer being used. Be sure soil is moist before applying and water thoroughly after fertilizing.

PRUNING AND DISBUDDING: Prune only as much as is necessary to shape your plant. Overly vigorous or objectionable growth should be nipped before it gets out of bounds or pruned at the end of the flowering season. When pruning or cutting blooms use sharp tools and cut just above a leaf or growth bud.

PEST CONTROL: Ant control greatly aids in combatting Aphids and Scale. Any proven Aphid spray is suitable. A 2% oil spray such as Volck is best for scale. For leaf eating insects use a stomach poison such as Crylite.

If a branch or plant suddenly withers it may be Fomopsis Blight which is treated by removing and burning all of the diseased part and spraying with Bordeaux then, and again next spring.

Flower Blight is revealed by brownish or rotting spots on the flowers and is most noticeable in damp weather. Control is by removing all old or damaged flowers which prevents this Fungus disease from being carried on to damage the flowers the following season.
